Important Note

It is with great confidence that I know if the athlete follows the code of conduct listed previously they will make gains. But they must do all of the codes not simply the ones they want to choose or the day that they choose to do them. It's an everyday thing even when they are not with us. If they followed every detail and have not made gains we have failed the athlete in our training.

If the athlete has not followed every code and every detail then the fault lies with them.

Contact

Please feel free to contact me at any time to discuss any detail pertaining to training and the development of the athlete in the realm of strength and conditioning.

PERFORMANCE & FITNESS

It is very important to understand the concept of a complete athlete. The mistake many times made is a focus on one element of training while neglecting others. One must look at all elements of training and ask the ever so important question, why am I doing this. It is never merely to get stronger, faster, leaner, bigger, etc.... but training ultimately should focus on enhancing performance in the playing arena. Thus it is important to develop complete programs that encompass components that will benefit the athlete in their sport of choice. It is not enough to ask an athlete to merely lift without giving them the proper formula. To simply tell them to lift or run is a disservice to them. It is also important to understand the differences between the components and use them in the appropriate manner. No matter what sport you participate in there are components that must be trained in order to be a complete athlete:
